LIBRARY KEEPS BUSY IN DECEMBER

(Blackstone, Virginia – December 10, 2016)

You might think that December is a slow month at the library. November saw new releases by Mary Higgins Clark, James Patterson, and Danielle Steel, among others. And we can look forward to books by Stuart Woods and Chris Bohjalian in January, but December is rather quiet in the world of books.

The library provides books, free eBooks, digital magazines, and DVDs, of course, but did you know that it also offers activities to help keep children busy over their winter break? For the younger crowd, the Blackstone Library holds story time on Fridays at 10:30, and there's a family-friendly movie being shown at noon on December 17. Also on that day, children will have the chance to come in at 10:30 to build a "gingerbread" house with graham crackers, and then decorate it before taking it home.

The library strives to provide programs to match the interests of its patrons and suggestions are welcome. Call your local branch for information about December's programs, and please be sure to offer your programming suggestions on your next visit.
